DOUBLE FUNERAL FOR VICTIMS OF TRAGEDY

Side by side in their last long sleep the bodies of Miss Margaret Matheson and Harvie Hughes will be buried tomorrow afternoon in Evergreen cemetery.

Earnest Hughes received word from the girl's mother in Los Angeles yesterday that if it was agreeable to him, she was willing to accede to the request made in the farewell note that they be buried together, instead of shipping the girl's body to Los Angeles.

Mr. Hughes has therefore arranged for a double funeral tomorrow. It will take place from the Palace Undertaking parlors at 2 o'clock. Side by side the victims of the deplorable tragedy will rest while the last rites are performed, and according to Hughes' written request, will be buried together.

VOLUNTEER SMOKER A GREAT SUCCESS

Members of No. 1 company, Bisbee Volunteer Fire Department, met last night at the city hall and after a brief business session threw open the doors of hospitality to their brethren of Company No. 2.

A tempting array of sandwiches was spread, together with baked beans cooked in Johnnie Carretto's approved style, all of which were washed down with liquid refreshments.

While the boys were eating, just about the principal topic of conversation was hose racing. They are all working hard for the success of this big event on the Fourth of July, and promise to make it the best ever pulled off in the territory.

A committee consisting of Sam Briscoe, Francis Thomas and Morris McKinney was appointed to visit and confer with the Upper Lowell and Warren volunteers relative to getting in on the coming celebration and participating in the big race. They will see the neighbor boys this week and report the result later on.

After the good things had been consumed W. C. R. Hoover, acting as toastmaster, called for short speeches, and about everybody present had to come across with a remark or two, very few escaping his watchful eye. The smoker was voted one of the most successful ever given by the volunteers.

HARVIE HUGHES WAS WITHOUT DOUBT OUT OF HIS MIND WHEN HE COMMITTED AWFUL DEED

That Harvie Hughes was mentally unbalanced and had been so since an illness he suffered some time ago, was also of an exceedingly jealous temperament, were the facts brought out yesterday afternoon in the coroner's inquest in Judge High's court to fix the responsibility for the shocking tragedy of Tuesday morning, when Hughes murdered Margaret Matheson, his choragist sweetheart, and then blew out his brains.

Guy McKay, his room-mate, gave the most important testimony. Hughes roomed at the McKay home, where he had stayed in preference to going home.

"Monday night about 8 o'clock Hughes came into the room and wrote a note," he said. "I saw him date it but did not get a glimpse of the contents. Later I saw him sign his own name in full and then that of his sweetheart, although I only saw him write 'Margaret M.' He must have completed it later on."

That day away with any theory that there had been a suicide pact between the two, as the subsequent testimony also tended to show.

"We then went out," he continued. "Hughes wanted to see Cliff Winters in Dubach Canyon and told me to wait for him. I did, and he soon came back dragging a shotgun and box of shells. These he took to the room. Then he went to his own home and asked his mother for a picture of the house, which was given him. Then he asked if she had any 45 shells and she told him she did not. After searching about for some time he left and we came upstairs. He then went to Miss Matheson's room and placed the picture of his home upon her dresser. She was not there at the time. Then we met W. T. Owen, W. S. Lanford and Harry Weakley in front of the Copper Queen hotel. He asked them for 45 shells, then borrowed a quarter from Mr. Lanford to get some with."

"We then went to the show. He seemed perfectly calm all the time and joked with me. He met Miss Matheson after the show and they went to the latter's apartment. I went home and Hughes returned about midnight. I was only half-awakened, but imagined he had something under the bed. It must have been the revolver with which the deed was committed. I left him in bed asleep Tuesday morning. That was the last time I saw him alive."

"Since the return of the Orphan company from Phoenix Harvie said there was a chance in Miss Matheson, and he was afraid she was going to throw him down. He remarked once to me that she had a gun he would make her tell what she had done at"

Phoenix. In moving a trunk for her the day she arrived he found a letter that evidently displeased him. It was Sunday, I think, that he found it. The letter was from another girl formerly with the company, known as 'Flo' and in it she referred to the fact that she wished Margaret was there in Phoenix to help her and Mr. Brady drink a bottle of beer. That night Hughes was not himself. He sat throughout one of the shows at the Orphan shaking as though afflicted with the ague."

"Monday night when he came home he said it was all off, and he intended to quit going with the girl. He also wrote poetry two or three days before the tragedy in which about every other word was her name, coupled with the fact that she would not set a date for their wedding."

"After Hughes made this threat about if he had a gun he would make her tell what she did at Phoenix, I spoke to Miss Matheson and told her to look out for Harvie, that he meant harm. She laughed and said 'oh, no.' I told her I was just telling her for her own good and to be careful. She said that she would."

Before the killing Hughes took nearly everything he had out of his own room. He also had written the girl's mother in Los Angeles, stating that they would both be home July 2. McKay further stated that Hughes was of an insanely jealous disposition. The first witness sworn was Dr. Gleason. He stated the nature of the wounds and that any one of the three inflicted upon the dead girl was sufficient to cause death. Cliff Winters testified that Hughes came to him Monday night and wanted to borrow his six-shooter, stating that his father wanted to kill some rabbits that were eating up vines in the yard at home. Winters suggested a shotgun but Hughes insisted upon the six-shooter so to pacify him he lent both the shot-gun and revolver. S. Rosensteln stated that Hughes bought a quarter's worth of 45 shells there Monday night. The other witnesses were W. T. Owen, Harry Weakley, John Smith, Mrs. H. R. Grafton, Dan McKenzie and M. M. King.

Earnest Hughes, father of Harvie, was also sworn to give particulars regarding his son. He afterwards made a statement as follows:

"For twenty years I have been trying to bring up this boy as he should be. I could never do anything with him. I have no regrets to express, but the blow is a terrible one and one from which it will take me a long, long time to recover. I do not believe the boy was in his right mind, else he would not have done what he did."

THE WRONG DIAGNOSIS.

Prompt the Use of Worthless Remedies.

FOURTH OF JULY MASS MEETING TONIGHT

Another mass meeting will be held this evening at 8 o'clock in the interests of the coming Fourth of July celebration. It will take place at the city hall and every patriotic citizen is urged to attend and express his views regarding what the program shall be.

At the last meeting it was decided to hold a two days celebration, July 2 and 3, and secure enough attractions to make it the banner celebration of the district. One of the chief features, of course, will be the territorial horse race, but others will also be secured.

Tonight the finance committee, which has been canvassing the downtown districts for funds with which to carry on the celebration, will report their progress and new territory assigned its members. Plans in detail will also be discussed, so don't fail to turn out and get in on the discussion; anyway, be present, just to show that the boosting spirit is still there.
